I'd give a dollar for a dime, today, tomorrow, or any time, if I could for just one more time
 See those crude, merry micro-offspring, at the age of maybe two, or maybe three, or certainly four,
 Who once in a wild glee, in merry Maplewood, New Jersey, on my very first stroll to the little library
 Up over the old stone firehouse on dionysian Springfield Avenue, recommended these tomes and more, to me.
 Stars shine bright on shatter light. In back of a dark ark full of invisible lark laughing merrily forever in social dark.
 Thee. The. The. That's never trust anyone over four to tell you what they came to adore before they turned sour, folks.
